Bear (/symbol/2507)

Even if they've never seen one in person, most people are probably familiar with the bear. In modern times, some of this familiarity doubtless comes from, shall we say "juvenile" sources; i.e. stuffed teddy bears, children's literary characters and perhaps movies/nature documentaries. On the other hand, the human fascination with this animal is by no means a modern phenomenon. The symbolic importance of the bear is extremely widespread, encompassing the traditions of many different cultures over the course of thousands of years.

Chi Rho (/symbol/200)

The Chi Rho is one of the earliest forms of christogram, and is used by some Christians. It is formed by superimposing the first two (capital) letters chi and rho (XP) of the Greek word "ΧΡΙΣΤΟΣ" =Christ in such a way to produce the monogram. Although not technically a Christian cross, the Chi-Rho invokes the crucifixion of Jesus, as well as symbolizing his status as the Christ.

Olive (/symbol/2789)

Olives are one of the most ubiquitous crops of the Mediterranean region, having been cultivated there for at least five thousand years. Not only were they a major staple of local diets, but also highly symbolic to the peoples and cultures living in the area. This article will address not just the fruit itself, but the oil produced from it and the tree from which it grows, since the symbolism of all three are interconnected.
