A close-up photograph of a large, white poppy flower in full bloom. The flower has a prominent yellow center with stamens. It is surrounded by green leaves and other flowers, including some blue ones in the background.

Those who promote the wearing of white poppies argue that the red poppy also conveys a specific political standpoint, and point to the divisive nature of the red poppy in Northern Ireland, where it is worn mainly by the Unionist community. They choose the white poppy over the red often because they wish to disassociate themselves from the militaristic aspects of Remembrance Day, rather than the commemoration itself.
