

Why is it Considered Bad Luck to Break a Mirror?

It is said that when you break a mirror, your cosmic penance is to endure seven years of bad luck, unless you can find a way to counteract the negative effects. Thankfully, there are a few things you can do to prevent all that karmically bad juju after you break a mirror, although you might have to get a little dirty or soggy. It's still preferable to spending the rest of your seven year sentence wondering why your car keys keep breaking off in the ignition or why you keep missing the bus.

The origin of the "break a mirror, face seven years of bad luck" superstition can be traced back to the Romans, who were the first to create glass mirrors. Just because your culture invents something totally useful like a mirror doesn't mean you can't still have some irrational beliefs about its use. The Romans, along with the Greek, Chinese, African and Indian cultures, believed that a mirror had the power to confiscate part of the user's soul. If the user's reflected image became distorted in any way, this could mean a corruption of his or her soul.

Shattered mirror.

To make bad matters even worse, if the user should break a mirror it would mean his or her soul would be trapped inside the Bizarro world the mirror represented. Essentially, a broken mirror created a broken soul, which in turn lead to the broken health of the unfortunate user. The Romans also believed that a person's physical body renewed itself every seven years, so under that criteria it would take seven years before the user's soul would be fully restored. Up until then, life for a mirror breaker would be one long string of unfortunate events, since he or she no longer had a healthy soul to ward off spiritual evil-doers.

Fortunately, there are also a number of rituals which are said to counteract the very bad hair day created when you break a mirror. Since the pieces of the mirror can still reflect the corrupted soul, the entire mirror should be ground into dust. No reflection, no problem. It is also suggested that after you break a mirror, you should invest in a shovel and bury the pieces under a tree during a full moon. African slaves working in America believed the bad luck could be washed away by placing the pieces in a river flowing in a southerly direction.

If you should happen to break a mirror accidentally, seven years of bad luck may not be your first concern. Wrap tape around the mirror's frame to hold the smaller fragments in place. Avoid touching the broken shards of glass without proper protection for your hands and feet. Whenever you break a mirror in a public space, you need to report the damage to an authority figure as soon as possible to prevent others from becoming injured.

I broke a mirror when I was 17. That same year I got bullied to death in school. Before I was that age, I was very cool with mostly everybody in the school. I knew almost everyone. And before the mirror accident, I had beautiful skin but after the mirror accident I broke out in major acne that didn't fade until several years later after hard work for treating it and keeping healthy. My boyfriend cheated on me with numerous men. Everything just tore apart after that mirror accident.

Then, several years later, everything was okay and normal until about three years ago when I broke another mirror and have experienced some terrible

I think that breaking a mirror wont give you bad luck, but if you think so, then be careful, even though it's just a superstition. You're more likely to get good luck if you think you'll get good luck, and the same with bad luck, instead. But most of all, I think the bad luck/shattered mirror thing is just crazy.

Post 124 years. I am not superstitious and didn't believe in the curse myth until I broke the mirror. I have a very quiet life with no major bad or good happenings, just easy. I am 42 so have been around a bit. It has been only two weeks since I broke the mirror and I have had my seven year old in hospital, I was in hospital, my car transmission has blown up, my TV power supply has blown up, my house roof is leaking my cat has started crapping all over the house and has never that done before and other little things.

I'm worried about what the future has to hold. How else can you break the curse? I only just got to clean up the mirror as I didn't know what to do with it as it's so big, so it's too late for the seven hour thing. It's gone already so I can't bury it.

By the definition of good and bad luck, it is the initial case of breaking the mirror that is bad luck in the first place, unless of course you were attempting to break it on purpose, in which case it's good luck.

There is no such thing as good or bad luck. It is the petty minded attempt of an individual to cope with a situation they cannot control by resigning their fate to a mystical force.

I once broke a line of mirrors. I first accidentally broke the first mirror then the others behind it just broke, as one collapsed on one another like dominoes. It was about 12 mirrors. So doing the math, seven times 10 is 70 years. What? Seventy years? Are you kidding me?

After the accident I had to pay the owner of the store for the accident. After that I went home and I wasn't looking and fell. Then, you won't believe what happened. I still remember it. A black cat walked across me when I reached home. Then I had terrible luck. I hope it will stop. No way for 70 years!

In the year 2000, I was new to a town where I was staying as an exchange student. As I rushed to the door due to thunder and snowing, I was going through the things in my backpack looking for the keys. At that moment, the cellphone inside the same backpack rang loudly, so as I reached for it, I also caught a little hand mirror that was in the bag. When they both came out in my hand, there was this shattering noise together with the ringing phone. The mirror cracked by itself as if the piercing noise had cracked it.

I had a big laugh at this weird incident, but not a logical explanation for the shattering of the vanity mirror.

So far, my wallet with over $1000 in it got stolen, I failed my driver's test, feel depressed, can't trust my friends anymore, my boyfriend broke up with me, I didn't have money to finish college and I got fired from my job just because I could not remember my lines. I broke a mirror about a year ago. About three weeks ago, there was a bad storm and lightning stuck the roof of my apartment and it caught on fire. Let's just say now I'm sleeping on my mom's couch getting woken up every 30 minutes.

Breaking a mirror is no joke, and I have six more years left of bad luck. That was just one example but seriously, every week it's something new. I can't complain because it was my own fault. I just have to make it through for six more years. By then I'll be 26 and hopefully within that time I'll have some juju and karma racked up in my favor.

In times long past, it was likely expensive for a person to replace a mirror. By stating one would have bad luck made people more careful.

It doesn't have anything much to do with religion, as far as I see it. Some people believe in superstition and what one truly believes will happen.

I broke two mirrors while putting them at the curb for garbage pickup, on purpose, while directly looking at it!

Didn't make a darn difference. Life continues, with normal random events. Ups and downs, normal life stuff.

But then, I'm not superstitious or delusional like most other people here, obviously.

Perhaps the fix is for people to simply stop choosing to see things that do not exist!

I read a lot of good stuff here. First, believe in God and Jesus first. Superstitions are just that. Second I have had good luck every time there is a Friday the 13th, so I believe the mirror I broke today will bring me good luck.

Last people, don't worry, be happy. Just smile, breathe the air, enjoy the sun and laugh, and love, and relax. Geez, we only have this one life to live and we need to be positive and have good attitudes. Don't waste seven or more years worrying. It's bad for the health, and God knows, health is everything. Luck to you all.

My Aunt got in a wreck about a few months ago, and the other car smashed all of her mirrors in her car. When she was in the hospital, she was perfectly fine. She went home a few days after, and broke another mirror in her bathroom. She's living an ordinary life like before the wreck. She believed in God.

So I think this whole 'when you break a mirror you have bad luck for seven years' is all a myth, and a superstition.

If you pray to God, and believe in him, you will have a pretty good life. It's all a coincidence to whatever happens to you. She's even lost a lot of weight in the past years. I think that's pretty much good luck.

I broke a stand up mirror. I knew about the beliefs about seven years bad luck, but I really tried not to think about it, you know like people say it is all in your head.

It has been almost a year now. Last night me and my daughter started counting things that have happened to us, and kind of looking back to analyze why or what should have been done to prevent it. Nothing makes sense. Seven big, some bad, some not really, accidents happened to us since. I just hope that it is not seven years but just seven things! I really hope so. And I'm looking forward for good changes in our life.

I just broke a mirror several days ago and I think that this will bring me good luck. Because before I broke the mirror, I had lost my job, had my car repossessed, got evicted from my apartment, and then had to live in a homeless shelter with my daughter while pregnant. people, there is no such of thing as bad luck for breaking something made by men, so please, maybe you guys should read the bible and believe in god as you believe in the mirror thing. It will help you a lot more.

I broke a mirror by stepping on it and since then I have had headaches, and some parts of my body will swell up for no apparent reason, and I can't sleep very well at all. I have shivers and will be so cold that I feel like I'm sitting in ice, but then shortly after, I'll get really hot.

I know this whole bad luck thing is just in the mind which is why I didn't think much of it. But then the type of person who needs to clean and return a

I think much of it, but I'm the type of person who needs my sleep and when I don't get it, well lets just say I'm not much of a 'happy camper' and it's just not fair for my friends and family to have to put up with my bad moods. What can I do?

I used to believe in superstition. But now I know it's all in the mind, and that makes it attract more negative or positive energy. Just think more positive each day. And for superstition. just believe in good superstitions not the negative ones. I am a Christian and I believe in God and I just pray when I think about or some negative superstition happened to me.

So if you get someone else to look in a mirror and then you break it, does that stop them from mimicking you all the time? Do they get bad luck or do you? If you're both looking in the mirror when it breaks, do your souls get mashed together somehow?

I don't think i have ever broken a mirror, but my luck hasn't been perfect. Bad things happen all the time in life; maybe it's healthier to use the shattered looking glass as a scapegoat than to accept the pitiless arbitrary nature of it all.

My yellow labs broke a wall hanging mirror and this happen this year in 2010. So far i am facing bad luck, the kids gotten poison, i have fines to pay, the car will not run, rent was late, the family bathtub busted a water main, i fell and twisted my ankle. I am fighting depression, the dog pooped in her kennel, the utilities are paid late to and my cable got shut off.

will this get any worse for me? it all happened when this mirror gotten broken. i think to myself if it rains it pours.

I broke a mirror three years ago, and I got so scared because of the well-known superstition but after that I got tremendous amount of good luck, I met successful, handsome millionaires, who all became my boyfriends!

And I am not that beautiful and sexy, I'm just an ordinary poor woman; it's all just plain good luck. All the other guys I met are millionaires too who are now my suitors. I am so happy and contented.

Yesterday I broke another mirror, and today I got invited by my aunt for mother's day. I got to eat a lot of delicious food for free! I never did

I broke a mirror this morning and I'm scared. I'm trying not to believe the myth, but I've had bad luck all my life i think and maybe this needed to happen to reverse all the bad luck I've been having. I pray this is the case. I was not looking in the mirror when it broke; it just slipped out of my hand.

It was a mirror that my landlord used to rent his apartment out, he let me use it while renting from him.

The year spent there was the worst year I've had. I was cleaning the apartment because I had just moved and my mop hit the mirror that was leaning on a wall and it broke, so I think it's a sign of a new beginning -- for the better.

Technically breaking a mirror isn't necessarily bad, you are simply being economically efficient and making more little tiny mirrors. Your trying have more for everyone and your not being selfish by keeping one big one all to your self. Breaking a mirror is an act of kindness.

When that one guy's mirror broke clean in half with that girl, it's just cool. Instead of having one big mirror, you have two smaller ones. You each have your own now :)

your own how ,,

There is always something positive out of everything that happens.

I broke a mirror a few days ago. Not on purpose though. It's like a stand up mirror. I put it against the wall too much and it just fell. Does that count as breaking a mirror?? Oh, and I went on another website and read something. It said that you can reverse a bad luck spell by spinning 7 times clockwise. It wasn't very specific. Srry bout' that. Well, I just tried it and I'm not sure if it worked.

I broke a stand up mirror in 1990 while I was a high school student. Between 1990 to 1994 I became very very depressed and suicidal. I tried to kill myself 3 times. But before I broke the mirror I was never depressed. Maybe it's just coincidence.
